Department of Health Expands COVID-19 Testing Sites Through Faith-Based Partnerships

Harrisburg, PA – Secretary of Health Dr. Rachel Levine today announced beginning Saturday, October 17, COVID-19 testing sites will be launched in communities in Allegheny and Dauphin counties in faith-based settings.

“Research shows that geographically, low-income areas, including Pennsylvanian communities of Black or African American, Hispanic and/or Spanish-speaking minorities, have been disproportionately affected with higher rates of COVID-19,” Dr. Levine said. “We know that appropriate testing, along with other public health interventions such as social distancing, wearing face masks, avoiding group gatherings and practicing hand washing can help communities mitigate transmission of COVID-19. In seeking to address the racial disparities of COVID-19 transmission, the department is looking to partner with important community-based organizations, such as faith-based organizations, to support and provide testing. We encourage health providers to follow our lead in partnering with faith-based organizations to create testing sites at faith-based settings in impacted communities.”

To ensure a healthier Pennsylvania for all, especially during these unprecedented times, the Wolf administration will only partner with organizations and entities throughout our response to COVID-19 that have established a commitment to non-discriminatory practices.

To reduce the spread of COVID-19 to communities with an increased likelihood of contracting the virus, faith-based communities, hospitals/health systems and community health centers are partnering together in Allegheny and Dauphin counties to increase testing availability in these more vulnerable communities.

In Allegheny County, the Allegheny Health Network, Cornerstone Care Community Health Center, Metro Community Health Center, Northside Christian Health Center, Primary Care Health Services, Inc., Sto-Rox Family Health Center and 21 congregations representing both the Faith Based Health Collaborative of Pittsburgh, PA, and the Pennsylvania Commonwealth Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction of the Churches of God in Christ have joined together with the department for this endeavor. In Dauphin County, the department is partnering with the Hamilton Health Center, the Salvation Army and five church congregations.

“While these relationships were built with the intention of closing the gap for COVID-19 testing disparities, we are taking this opportunity to disseminate COVID-19 messaging and foster long-term relationships with these churches,” Dr. Levine said.

In addition to the aforementioned church organizations, the department has established relationships with other faith-based organizations that are ready to collaborate with providers, received education on an existing evidence-based model utilized by a neighboring state and provider, and is working to identify locations where there may be a need for accessible testing.

Already, the commonwealth has partnered with entities including Rite Aid, CVS, Patient First, Walgreens, Latino Connection to provide testing. Pennsylvanians can also be tested at health clinics, through health systems, hospitals and Federally Qualified Health Centers (FQHCs) and other

locations. The department continues to conduct robust testing at the state public health laboratory as well.

The department began reaching out to certain hospitals, health systems and FQHCs to determine if they would consider partnering with local faith-based organizations to establish a temporary testing site that may include:

- Education;
- Diagnostic testing; and
- Referrals and connection to health care providers.

Interested entities may reach out to the Department of Health Office of Health Equity for a list of the participating faith-based organizations in their county who have shown an interest in this initiative.
